Morals are the personality values that exist within an individual and positively influence the development of characteristics, fashion, spirit, a constructive soul, and motivation for life. Positive moral values significantly influence the development of society and the establishment of civilization. Numerous moral principles may be extracted from literary works, including novels, short stories, dramas, and movies. The literary works contain various moral values, including honesty, loyalty, friendship, and cooperation. Morality is inextricably linked with other values. It should be implemented in one's daily routine (Puput, 2021). For instance, the economic value should be associated with honesty.

Loyalty should be related to the humanity or relationship. This means that the moral values of people's personalities must be applied in daily life so that people's lives run well. It can avoid conflict for humans in this life. In addition, Sa'ida (2020) said that moral value is related to the kind of people's personalities. The moral values of people are not identical. It will be different. It is based on the people's socio-economic, politics, religion, ethnicity, and culture, and they have their value systems. It means that the moral values of people's personalities are different. It depends on the status of the people. Moreover, Soulisa and Lubur (2024) said that people's personalities own moral values. By the existence of good moral values, religious attitudes will be formed so that people will not be influenced by negative things. It means that moral values are essential in our lives. In addition, Hasanah (2017) said that moral value is the kind of action used to educate.

Social and moral values are collaboration, helpfulness, affection, and discussion. In addition, Rahmawati argued that there are kinds of moral values. They are social, moral, ethical, and polite. Jannah and Nursaid (2023) argued that the categories of moral values individuals are bravery, humility, sincerity, patience, responsibility, self-confidence, surrender, desperate, ungrateful, and hypocritical. Second, the moral values relationships among humans are friendship, loyalty, and mutual assistance. Moral categories towards God is categorized as grateful to Allah.

The research on moral values was also conducted by Sa'ida (2020). Qualitative methodology was implemented during the investigation. The research sample consisted of children between the ages of five and six. The researcher discovered that folktales have the potential to instill moral values in the minds of children by examining the attitudes and characters of the characters in the story. Due to the folktale, the children could adopt positive attitudes, such as honesty, helping, politeness, and respect. They also could differentiate between good and bad behavior.

The researchers used the descriptive method. It used a qualitative approach. From this research, the researcher found that there were some intrinsic elements in ten folktales. Each folk tale had themes, plots, backgrounds, figures, characters, and messages. Besides that, the researcher also found that several moral values were incorporated into the folktale. They were moral values related to responsibility, conscience, and obligations. The dominant moral values found in the ten series of Riau folklore are moral values related to conscience.
